

Author Biography

Ron K. Miller

LONG BIO

Ron K. Miller is a songwriter, composer, and synesthete based in Rogers, Arkansas. He has been playing music for more than 30 years across piano (his primary instrument), guitar, drums, cello, ukulele, and vocals. He experiences chromesthesia, a form of synesthesia in which sound produces involuntary visual perception of color and spatial dimension, a condition he did not have a name for until adulthood.

Miller works in corporate America alongside his creative life. He is married to Jessica and has three children.

RESONANCE: The Music We're Made Of is his debut nonfiction book. It argues that music is not a cultural invention but a biological behavior rooted in neural architecture older than any culture, responding to physical patterns that were here before we were. Structured in three parts and a closing Coda that follows the question past what the evidence can prove.

SHORT BIO

Ron K. Miller is a musician, synesthete, and writer based in Arkansas. He has played piano, guitar, drums, cello, and ukulele for 30+ years. RESONANCE is his first book.

CONTACT

info@resonance-book.com | resonance-book.com | @resonancethebook